AAEA Elects New Executive Board Member

Dr. Ani Katchova Brings Worldwide Experience to Association Board

Ani Katchova, Ph.D., of The Ohio State University begins her three-year term on the Agricultural & Applied Economics Association's Executive Board. Dr. Katchova is an Associate Professor and Farm Income Enhancement Chair at the Department of Agricultural, Environmental, and Development Economics at her alma mater.

In addition to her work at The Ohio State University, Dr. Katchova served as an associate editor of the American Journal of Agricultural Economics, was a Fulbright Specialist Scholar and AAAS Science & Technology Policy Fellow, and is the founder of the Econometrics Academy, which offers world-wide education in econometrics.

Before being elected to the Executive Board, Dr. Katchova worked with AAEA as the Chair of the Economic Statistics and Information Resources Committee and currently serves on the Association's Publications Committee and Government Relations Committee.

"With its culture of engagement AAEA has been the leading organization in our field for networking opportunities and presenting and discussing work with colleagues," Dr. Katchova said. "We can continue to innovate by using new technology to increase networking and collaboration among AAEA members."
